2) Convey your motivation for medicine and your interest in the school. At the end of an interview, I evaluate a candidate across several domains. One of those is motivation and passion for medicine. If I cannot recall why the applicant is interested in a medical career, I usually score them lower. 5 Essential Tips for Your Medical School Interview. Admissions officers use the medical school interview to identify candidates with maturity, empathy, and superior interpersonal skills. They already know your credentials. Now they want to know what kind of person you are and how you relate to others. Interview policies vary. The medical school interview is a crucial phase in the admissions process. Getting an interview means that the school believes you are, at least on paper, qualified for their program. Unfortunately, good grades and test scores aren't the only predictors medical schools use for their applicants. As many schools are moving to the multiple mini interview (MMI) format, a lot of interviewing well involves thinking on your feet and efficiently articulating your perspective. One of the best ways to prepare for medical school interviews, (and in fact a career in medicine), is to read.
